

All mining industry sectors face difficult property investment decisions.

Property investment decisions giving you headaches?

Every mining company has a preferred strategy for growth and wealth creation. Mineral property investment and development decisions are critical to the continuing success of mining companies. These decisions should be aligned with the company's philosophy, carry acceptable risk levels, and be easily explained and justified to shareholders and financial regulators. The decisions should be quantitative, and calculated using a robust, technically sound process.

Assigning value and priority is difficult because mineral property evaluations are prepared by different assessors ... at different times ... for different purposes ... for different clients ... and under different state requirements. How to find common ground among these has been a major challenge.

But now, applying our proprietary Mineral Property Suitability Advisor™ to your list of candidate properties provides you with an objective measure of a single property or as many properties as you want to consider. Their relative values are based on your criteria of importance and suitability. Equally important, it allows for different expert opinions, so all decision-makers can contribute to the results.
